FROM THE FOUNDER

A Word From Brew

I've been on both sides of a major game launch. As a competitive gamer who spent years playing at the highest level, I know what it takes to set up for a serious session. I've also driven delivery on big nights — and I can tell you firsthand that GTA 6 launch night is going to break DoorDash. This guide exists so you don't get caught unprepared, and so you actually feel good on launch night instead of wrecked by hour 10. GTA 6 is the biggest launch most of us will ever see. Thirteen years of waiting. Do it right — and do it in a way you can actually enjoy.

SECTION 01 — MONEY

Pre-Launch Finance Prep

Budget a minimum of an extra $100–$200 for launch week. The easiest way to do this without feeling it: start putting $5–$10 extra per week in an envelope right now. By launch day you'll have it ready without stress.

■ Pay bills ahead of launch week

Rent, utilities, insurance — clear the slate. You don't want a financial interruption on launch night.

■ Budget for days off work

If you're requesting time off or gig apps like DoorDash, account for that lost income now. Plan it, don't wing it.

■ Pre-order the game now

Don't be scrambling on launch day. Pre-order and pre-load. You want to be playing when your friends start, not downloading.

■ Stock groceries 2 days before

Don't be running to the store on launch day. Have everything in the house already.

■ Tip your delivery driver

DoorDash and every delivery service will be slammed. Be generous — those drivers are working hard that night.

SECTION 02 — TIME OFF

Request Your Day Off Now

When I was competing at the top level, my bosses knew that certain game launches required advance notice. I gave 4 to 6 weeks notice every time. They respected it because I respected them enough to plan ahead. GTA 6 launch night is your Super Bowl. Treat it like one.

DAY OFF REQUEST TEMPLATE

Subject: Personal Day Request — [Launch Date]

Body: Hi [Manager Name],

I would like to request a personal day on [Date]. I have planned this in advance and all responsibilities will be covered and caught up prior to my absence.

Thank you for the consideration.

[Your Name]

Pro tip: Request TWO days — launch night and the recovery day after. A late night deserves a real recovery day, not a groggy commute.

Notice: Give 4–6 weeks minimum. The earlier the better.

SECTION 03 — GEAR

The Launch Night Gear Checklist

From someone who has run multi-day gaming sessions with a full crew. This is the real list.

■ TV — Go Big

GTA 6 is designed to be breathtaking. Minimum 41". Darken the room. Close the curtains. This is a cinematic experience — treat it like one.

■ Headset or Surround Sound

If you have a surround sound setup, use it. 7.1 surround will make Vice City feel real. Headset works great for late nights.

■ New Cables

If any of your cables have been acting up, replace them before launch. Not during.

■ Extra Controllers + Batteries

Dead controller as the game launches is a rite of passage nobody wants. Charge everything. Have backup batteries or a charging dock.

■ Comfortable Chair

You will be in it for a while. Your back will thank you.

■ Side Table + Coasters

Keep your space clean. Spilled drinks on equipment kill setups. (If married, coasters. Trust me.)

■ A Fan

Rooms heat up during long sessions. Airflow matters more than people think.

■ Do Not Disturb on Your Phone

Turn it on before midnight. Nothing breaks immersion like a notification flood.

■ Ethernet Cable

If you are serious about online play or streaming, hardwire it. A laggy router on launch night with millions online will ruin your experience.

Feed the Session Right

I've hosted gaming marathons for a full crew before — pizza runs, big-batch meals, the works. Here's what actually works for a solo or small group launch night.

FOOD

- Pizza — order by 9 PM, not midnight
- Finger foods only (no greasy keyboards)
- Chips, jerky, snack mix
- Honey buns / snack cakes for breakfast
- Something substantial at hour 12
- Chili in a crockpot if cooking ahead
- Lasagna or big batch meal for groups

DRINKS

- Water — make it the base of the night
- Sweet and unsweet tea (gallon jugs)
- OJ and apple juice for morning
- Sprite / Root Beer to wind down caffeine
- Coffee percolator for the long haul, in moderation
- Milk for the middle-of-night cereal emergency
- Soda/energy drinks fine — see note below

CAFFEINE & ENERGY DRINKS — KEEP IT SANE

Track your total caffeine for the night the way you'd track anything else — don't just keep drinking because you're still awake. Caffeine sensitivity varies a lot person to person, so know your own limit rather than matching anyone else's pace. Water first, caffeine second. And if you take any medication, that's a conversation with your doctor or pharmacist, not something a guide like this should tell you — we're not going to recommend anything here.

Pacing Yourself — Hour by Hour

Long sessions are part of the fun of a launch like this — but the best sessions are the ones you actually remember and feel fine after. Here's how to pace it so you're still sharp deep into the night, not just gutting it out.

■ Every hour

Take a five-minute movement break — stand up, stretch, walk around. It sounds small. It's the single biggest thing that keeps you feeling good hour after hour.

■ Hour 6

Full body stretch, refill your water, and eat something real — not just snacks.

■ Hour 12

Time for a proper break: shower, real food, and a longer walk if you can. Keep water as your default drink from here on.

■ Hour 18

This is the decision point most people hit. If you're feeling it, that's your body telling you it's close to time to wrap up — listen to it.

■ Plan your stopping point in advance

Decide before the night starts roughly when you're calling it, and stick to something close to that plan. A great launch night has an ending, not just a crash.

A NOTE ON SLEEP

Do not drive while sleep deprived — if you need to go anywhere after a long session, get a ride or wait until you've actually slept. Get real sleep before launch night and plan to catch up on sleep after, rather than treating exhaustion as a badge of honor. You'll enjoy more of the game, not less, if you're actually rested for it.

SECTION 06 — TECH

Pre-Load. No Exceptions.

Pre-load the game the moment it is available. You do not want to be the person sitting at a download screen while your friends are already finding things you haven't discovered yet. Pre-load and be ready at midnight.

SECTION 07 — PEOPLE

Family, Kids, and Neighbors

If you have kids: Arrange an overnight stay with grandparents or family if possible. If your spouse is not a gamer, plan and pay for a night out for them — dinner and a movie — the night before launch. Enjoy it with them. Then come home and play. Don't neglect your family over this — it causes problems down the road.

If you have neighbors: Tell them what's about to happen. Apologize in advance. And buy them a pizza. I'm serious. A surround sound system in a house will rattle pictures off walls. A little goodwill goes a long way and keeps you from getting a noise complaint at 2 AM.

SECTION 08 — DELIVERY WARNING

GTA 6 Will Break DoorDash

I drive for DoorDash. I know exactly what a big night does to the delivery ecosystem. GTA 6 launch night will be one of the biggest delivery events in history. Nobody is cooking. Every gamer who didn't prep is ordering food at the same time. Here's how to not get burned.

■ Order before 9 PM

The wave hits when people get off work, settle in, and realize they're hungry. Beat it.

■ Allow an extra hour

Even if DoorDash says 30 minutes — on launch night assume 90. Budget for it.

■ Schedule your order ahead

Most delivery apps allow scheduled orders. Use this feature. Set it and forget it.

■ Surge pricing is coming

Delivery fees will spike. Budget $5–10 extra per order that night.

Launch Night Minute by Minute

TIME	ACTION
Starting Now	Request day off from work. Pay bills ahead. Start the snack fund envelope — $5–$10 a week from today until launch.
2 Days Before	Stock the fridge and pantry. No store runs on launch day.
Day Before	Do chores, yard work, house work. Clear your obligations. Sleep 7–9 hours.
10:00 PM Launch Night	Set up your station. Test all connections. Charge every controller. Confirm pre-load is complete.
11:00 PM	Order your food NOW if you haven't already. Do not wait until midnight.
12:00 AM	Game unlocks. You're already loaded. You're already fed. You're already in.
1:00 AM	First drive through Vice City. Take it in. You waited 13 years for this.
Hour 6	Stretch. Shower if needed. Eat something real.
Hour 12+	Longer break. Pace yourself — you've got a plan for when you're calling it tonight.
Your stopping point	Whatever you planned before the night started — stick close to it. Get real sleep. There's a lot more Vice City to come.

READY.

People in their mid-twenties when GTA V dropped are now almost 40. They have kids, homes, and retirement accounts. But those memories never left. GTA 6 is not just a game. It is a cultural moment thirteen years in the making. Show up for it right — and show up rested enough to actually enjoy it.
